Anton DeCesare CSD 340 Interview with Subject

Question 1: Could you share a major milestone in your motherhood journey that stands out as especially transformative?

Being unable to be with Remy in the hospital when she was sick right after the birth of Piper was eye opening. Even though I knew she was safe and happy with Nana, not being with her hurt my heart in a way I had never experienced.

Question 2: What values or lessons do you hope to pass on to your children?

To be a good person, make ethically sound choices, have empathy for others, be kind to themselves, and enjoy life as much as possible.

Question 3: When you reflect on your reading journey, is there a specific milestone—such as completing a certain book or discovering an author—that significantly influenced your love for reading?

I was the nerd with the book light under the covers after bedtime, so I have always loved reading. However, in 4th grade, I did get to throw a pie at a teacher in front of the whole school for winning a summer reading challenge.

Question 4: If you could recommend one book that had a profound impact on you, what would it be and why?

The Glass Castle by Jeannette Walls. Even though it doesn't mirror my upbringing in story, it does in details of growing up in rural Appalachia.

Question 5: Can you pinpoint a memorable moment or milestone when you realized cooking was more than just a routine task, but rather a genuine passion?

Not a specific moment, but I learned I do really enjoy cooking when I am not rushed. I like to put on a podcast and make it "me time". In addition, I appreciate the dopamine boost from organizing and cooking a meal.

Question 6: Which ingredient or dish do you gravitate toward most often, and what makes it special to you?

Definitely pasta. It is versatile, delicious, and fast.

Question 7: Were there any people—perhaps family members or friends—who served as a major influence in your journey?

The biggest influence I have had in adulthood are my mother and father in law. Having a more mature adult around who sets expectations for you is really important

Question 8: How do you balance your interests with the demands of family life and motherhood?

Is scrolling TikTok an interest? Right now, I understand the season of life we are in doesn't allow much time for personal interests and that is okay. It won't be like this forever.

Question 9: If there's one thing you'd like people to know about your personal journey—what would it be?

It's okay to falter and fail and it's important to be kind to yourself in the meantime. Not everything has to be perfect.

Question 10: Looking ahead, are there any important milestones or dreams you hope to achieve?

To work more toward enjoying life and living in the moment with my kids.

Anton DeCesare CSD 340 Subject Essay

Penny's journey is one of resilience, love, and self-discovery. Motherhood has been her most transformative experience, shaping her values and deepening her empathy. A defining moment came when her eldest daughter, Remy, was hospitalized shortly after the birth of her second child, Piper. Though she knew Remy was safe with her grandmother, the pain of not being with her was overwhelming, reinforcing the depth of her love and commitment as a mother. This experience strengthened her understanding of the sacrifices and emotional complexities that come with parenthood, shaping how she prioritizes her children's well-being.

She hopes to instill kindness, integrity, and empathy in her children, encouraging them to make ethical choices while embracing life's joys. She wants them to be good people, treat others with compassion, and also be kind to themselves. Penny understands that childhood is the foundation for lifelong character, and she takes her role in guiding them seriously. She also believes in the importance of enjoying life, ensuring that her children learn to find happiness in both small and significant moments.

Beyond motherhood, Penny's love for reading has been a lifelong passion. As a child, she stayed up late under the covers with a book light, eager to absorb stories. One of her favorite memories was winning a summer reading challenge in fourth grade, earning her the chance to throw a pie at a teacher in front of the whole school. If she had to pick one book that profoundly impacted her, it would be The Glass Castle by Jeannette Walls. Though the book does not mirror her own life exactly, its portrayal of growing up in rural Appalachia resonates with her deeply.

Cooking is another passion, providing her with moments of peace and creativity. She enjoys putting on a podcast while preparing meals, making cooking feel like "me time." She finds joy in organizing and preparing a well-balanced meal, and the process provides a dopamine boost that adds to her sense of fulfillment. Pasta is her go-to dish—simple, versatile, and satisfying.

While she balances motherhood with her interests, she understands this phase of life is temporary. Right now, much of her time is devoted to raising her children, but she embraces this season with patience. Looking ahead, Penny's greatest goal is to live fully in the moment with her children, cherishing every memory while embracing the lessons that life continues to offer.
